RED ANGUS

annual production sale
APRIL 20, 2026

1 PM ~ AT THE RANCH ~ FAULKTON, SOUTH DAKOTA

Welcome

TO FAULKTON

At Rhodes Angus, cattle are more than a breed to us—they represent a philosophy about how angus cattle should function within a real production environment.

Both Red and Black Angus, when bred with intention, represent one of the most balanced and dual-purpose breeds of modern times. When the genetics are aligned correctly, the meat-to-bone ratio can be exceptional, yielding an outstanding end product while still maintaining the maternal traits that make a cow herd truly sustainable—fertility, longevity, and mothering ability.

In our opinion, part of the challenge facing the American cow-calf industry today is that we have spent many years selecting heavily for extreme calving ease and yearling weight. While these traits have value, the unintended consequence can be cattle that struggle with fertility, structural longevity, and feed efficiency in real grazing environments. Many of these performance metrics are measured in controlled feedlot conditions where dry matter intake is carefully managed, but most American cattle are asked to perform in far more variable prairie-based systems where forage conditions change constantly.

Our belief is simple: the long-term success of a cow herd should not be measured by a single calf crop or a single performance number. It should be measured in lactations, fertility, structural soundness, and the longevity of the cow herd. Rome was not built in a day, and meaningful genetic progress cannot be forced within one breeding season. Environment, nutrition, and management always play a role, and wise breeding programs respect that reality.

The cattle we strive to produce are fertile early, hormonally correct, athletic, and structurally sound. They must exhibit balanced phenotype, maternal instinct, and the ability to adapt to a wide range of environments. Above all, they must be functional cattle—animals that work for commercial producers and stand the test of time.

Stewardship of the land and animals is also central to what we do. Over the past few years we have continued to explore regenerative management practices within our grazing program. The results have been encouraging. This past season we did not need fly control, forage production on the ranch has doubled, cattle weights are stronger than ever, and the cows are maintaining better body condition. These outcomes reinforce our belief that healthy soil, diverse forage, and thoughtful grazing management can benefit both the land and the livestock that depend on it.

We also believe that our industry benefits when producers are willing to keep learning and challenge old assumptions. Regenerative and adaptive management practices are not about abandoning tradition—they are about ensuring that this way of life remains viable for the next generation of cattlemen and women.

To the families who invest in our cattle, our commitment is simple: we are here for you. Cattle production is never perfect. Bulls can get injured, weather can change plans, and unexpected things happen. When they do, we want to be a resource and a partner—not a stressful phone call. Our goal is to support the people who trust our genetics in their programs.

Above all, we recognize that none of this happens on our own. We believe that God is in control, and that many of the steps that led us here were taken by faith long before we fully understood the direction we were headed.

Looking ahead, our long-term vision is rooted in a simple idea: growth brings fulfillment. Perfection is always a moving target. As breeders, we believe our industry is strongest when we are honest about our cattle—their strengths as well as their limitations—and when we work together as a community to improve the breed.

Every great breeding animal has something you do not need more of. Recognizing that truth is not a weakness; it is part of responsible cattle breeding.

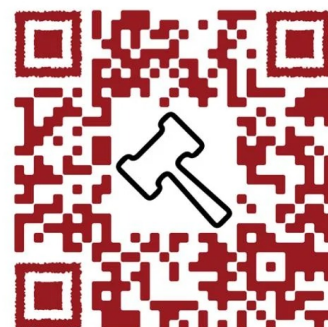

Our goal is to produce cattle that last—cows that raise calves year after year, mothers that care for their offspring, animals that are gentle, functional, and profitable for the families who own them.

Thank you for your interest in our program and for being part of the future of American cattle production.

Sincerely,

All of us at Rhodes Angus
